people change that s a given people look back at the experiences of their lives differently with time that s also a given the stories in this slender volume each look back on various life changing youthful experiences some look back on the events of young adulthood others look back on the events of childhood from the perspective of young adulthood what these stories share in common is their insightful exploration of the often unanticipated twists of fate that shape our lives these explorations of personal history are what the ancient philosopher socrates would describe as triumphs of the examined life fred phillips opens the volume with zero sum world a story both as pessimistic and as optimistic as any piece of literature ever penned phillips watches a cynical old drunk sip away his life and his young friend s money in a self pitying life of televised baseball games and around the clock beer guzzling however not even this life is exhausted by what a casual observer might conclude about it perhaps goodness and an ironic sense of justice will spring from the grave gary dean jennings and bryan valera each looks back on the care free days of an uninhabited youth jennings s where the mod look began looks back upon the days which preceded his army service neither praising nor condemning his own indulgences in the impulses of youth valera s retrospective on the early 90s reminds the reader that one never knows where the future may lead people one classic mission delightfully reveals the beach life in san diego and invites the reader to reconsider the people who are most easily dismissed by the dominant status conscious elements of society sometimes our humanity is found in our willingness to defy common sense in order to respect our common humanity samuel madson s tiny hearts affords the reader a nostalgic look back on the unlikely outcomes of a college romance things may begin with too much drinking and too little nobility but it s amazing what can develop from even the shakiest of foundations kimberly d king s hound dog reminds us that not all parents are perfect in fact maybe no parents are perfect but even the most emotionally stunned and intellectually stagnant of parents have dreams for their children this mother longs for her children to have one final glimpse at the king of rock n roll elvis presley our final story jason petersen s sadman allows a more seasoned and more mature man to reflect upon the complex dynamics of college courtship the gracious angels of an aging mind bless the misguided wanderings of a hormone crazed alcohol obsessed young man with some lasting insights not exactly a live happily ever after story but insightful nonetheless as always these stories have won the highly competitive phyllis scott short story contest we are thrilled to bring these emerging authors to our readers phyllis scott series editor historical fiction is a contradiction in terms history is what happened fiction what did not yet great novelists have often disregarded this logical difficulty taking up the tools of the historian to explore the shadowy recesses of the past their labors have brought forth many literary treasures but how accurately do these masterpieces of the imagination reflect the past in novel history twenty accomplished historians consider this question in relation to some of our most important historical novels their essays are followed in most instances by a response from the novelist these dialogues illuminate one of the most fascinating and perplexing issues of our time the relation between the real past and our finest imaginative renderings of it novel history includes essays by distinguished historians such as john demos michael kammen joan d hedrick john lukacs eugene d genovese richard white and tom wicker and responses from notable novelists including gore vidal john updike russell banks don delillo larry mcmurtry jane smiley madison smartt bell william styron t coraghessan boyle william kennedy charles frazier thomas fleming and tim o brien novel history is both a uniquely
