Us Versus Them 2020 crime and gentrification represent hot button issues in racially diverse neighborhoods drawing on three and a half years of ethnographic fieldwork us versus them provides a detailed analysis of community conflict in rogers park and uptown two chicago neighborhoods the book shows how competing views about neighborhood change divided residents into two political camps which prioritized either the fight against crime or the fight against gentrification this division frequently materialized as a type of racial conflict because anti gentrification activists and their allies charged that grassroots anti crime initiatives were in truth barely covert racist practices that meant to foster racial displacement and marginalization chapter by chapter the book traces these conflicts in different areas of community life it examines the strategies of public safety work that residents used to fight crime and how their efforts contributed to gentrification how anti gentrification activists resisted criminalization and gentrification how politicians sought to actively use or downplay community divisions in their electoral campaigns and how residents of different racial and ethnic backgrounds positioned themselves in these battles

Stuck in Place 2013-05-15 in the 1960s many believed that the civil rights movement's successes would foster a new era of racial equality in america four decades later the degree of racial inequality has barely changed to understand what went wrong patrick sharkey argues that we have to understand what has happened to african american communities over the last several decades in stuck in place sharkey describes how political decisions and social policies have led to severe disinvestment from black neighborhoods persistent segregation declining economic opportunities and a growing link between african american communities and the criminal justice system as a result neighborhood inequality that existed in the 1970s has been passed down to the current generation of african americans some of the most persistent forms of racial inequality such as gaps in income and test scores can only be explained by considering the neighborhoods in which black and white families have lived over multiple generations this multigenerational nature of neighborhood inequality also means that a new kind of urban policy is necessary for our nation's cities sharkey argues for urban policies that have the potential to create transformative and sustained changes in urban communities and the families that live within them and he outlines a durable urban policy agenda to move in that direction

Community Work and Racism 2023-03-24 first published in 1982 community work and racism takes as its theme the fundamental need of the black community in britain to be freed from the disabling effects of white racism both in the individual and institutional forms starting from the premise that racism is a white problem in britain the book argues that community work must put white racism on everyone s local and national alliances in the fight against racism in british society the contributors consider the response or lack of it there has so far been by white community work to racism and look at the state's response to racism as it impinges on community work they discuss black community action and initiatives on racism explore alliances which have come into being in the fight against racism and examine the conditions which make such alliances possible this book will be of interest to students of sociology public policy race and ethnic studies

Won't You Be My Neighbor 2006-10-19 los angeles is a city of delicate racial and ethnic balance as evidenced by the 1965 watts violence the 1992 rodney king riots and this year's award winning film crash the city's myriad racial groups coexist uneasily together often on the brink of confrontation in fact los angeles is highly segregated with racial and ethnic groups clustered in homogeneous neighborhoods these residential groupings have profound effects on the economic well being and quality of life of residents dictating which jobs they can access which social networks they can tap in to and which schools they attend in won't you be my neighbor sociologist camille zubrinsky charles explores how modern racial attitudes shape and are shaped by the places in which people live using in depth survey data and information from focus groups with members of l a's largest racial and ethnic groups won't you be my neighbor explores why los angeles remains a segregated city charles finds that people of all backgrounds prefer both racial integration and a critical mass of same race neighbors when asked to reveal their preferred level of racial integration people of all races show a clear and consistent order of preference with whites considered the most highly desired neighbors and blacks the least desirable this is even true among recent immigrants who have little experience with american race relations charles finds that these preferences which are driven primarily by racial prejudice and minority group fears of white hostility taken together with financial considerations strongly affect people's decisions about where they live still charles offers reasons for optimism over time and with increased exposure to other racial and ethnic groups people show an increased willingness to live with neighbors of other races in a racially and ethnically diverse city segregated neighborhoods can foster distrust reinforce stereotypes and agitate inter group tensions won't you be my neighbor zeroes in on segregated neighborhoods to provide a compelling examination of the way contemporary racial attitudes shape and are shaped by the places where we live

Sharing America's Neighborhoods 2009-06-30 the first part of this book presents a fresh and encouraging report on the state of racial integration in america's neighborhoods it shows that while the majority are indeed racially segregated a substantial and growing number are integrated and remain so for years still many integrated neighborhoods do unravel quickly and the second part of the book explores the root causes instead of panic and white flight causing the rapid breakdown of racially integrated neighborhoods the author argues contemporary racial change is driven primarily by the decision of white households not to move into integrated neighborhoods when they are moving for reasons unrelated to race such white avoidance is largely based on the assumptions that integrated neighborhoods quickly become all black and that the quality of life in them declines as a result the author concludes that while this explanation may be less troubling than the more common focus on racial hatred and white flight there is still a good case for modest government intervention to promote the stability of racially integrated neighborhoods the final chapter offers some guidelines for policymakers to follow in crafting effective policies

W.E.B. Dubois on Sociology & the Black Community 1978 while he did the research for this book gerald suttles lived for almost three years in the high delinquency area around hull house on chicago s new west side he came to know it intimately and was welcomed by its residents who are italian mexican puerto rican and negro suttles contends that the residents of a slum neighborhood have a set of standards for behavior that take precedence over the more widely held moral standards of straight society these standards arise out of the specific experience of each locality are peculiar to it and largely determine how the neighborhood people act one of the tasks of urban sociology according to suttles is to explore why and how slum communities provide their inhabitants with these local norms the social order of the slum is the record of such an exploration and it defines theoretical principles and concepts that will aid in subsequent research

The Social Order of the Slum 1968 race brokers examines how housing market professionals including housing developers real estate agents mortgage lenders and appraisers construct 21st century urban housing markets in ways that contribute to or undermine racial segregation drawing on extensive ethnographic and interview data collected in houston texas race brokers shows that housing market professionals play a key role in connecting people or refusing to connect people to housing resources and opportunities they make these brokering decisions through reference to racist or anti racist ideas typically housing market professionals draw from racist ideas that rank order people and neighborhoods according to their perceived economic and cultural housing market value entwining racism with their housing market activities and interactions racialized housing market routines encourage this entwinement by naturalizing racism as a professional tool race brokers tracks how professionals broker racism across the housing exchange process from the home s construction to real estate brokerage mortgage lending home appraisals and the home sale closing in doing so it shows that professionals make housing exchange a racialized process that contributes to neighbourhood inequality and racial segregation however in contrast to the racialized status quo a small number of housing market professionals draw on anti racist ideas and strategies to extend equal opportunities to individuals and neighborhoods de naturalizing housing market racism race brokers highlights the imperative to interrupt the racism that pervades housing market professionals work dismantle the racialized routines that underwrite such racism and cultivate a truly fair housing market

Race Brokers 2021-04-08 the fair housing act of 1968 outlawed housing discrimination by race and provided an important tool for dismantling legal segregation but almost fifty years later residential segregation remains virtually unchanged in many metropolitan areas particularly where large groups of racial and ethnic minorities live why does segregation persist at such high rates and what makes it so difficult to combat in cycle of segregation sociologists maria krysan and kyle crowder examine how everyday social processes shape residential stratification past neighborhood experiences social networks and daily activities all affect the mobility patterns of different racial groups in ways that have cemented segregation as a self perpetuating cycle in the twenty first century through original analyses of national level surveys and in depth interviews with residents of chicago krysan and crowder find that residential stratification is reinforced through the biases and blind spots that individuals exhibit in their searches for housing people rely heavily on information from friends family and coworkers when choosing where to live because these social networks tend to be racially homogenous people are likely to receive information primarily from members of their own racial group and move to neighborhoods that are also dominated by their group similarly home seekers who report wanting to stay close to family members can end up in segregated destinations because their relatives live in those neighborhoods the authors suggest that even absent of family ties people gravitate toward neighborhoods that are familiar to them through their past experiences including where they have previously lived and where they work shop and spend time because historical segregation has shaped so many of these experiences even these seemingly race neutral decisions help reinforce the cycle of residential stratification as a result segregation has declined much more slowly than many social scientists have expected to overcome this cycle krysan and crowder advocate multi level policy solutions that pair inclusionary zoning and affordable housing with education and public relations campaigns that emphasize neighborhood diversity and high opportunity areas they argue that together such programs can expand the number of destinations available to low income residents and help offset the negative images many people hold about certain neighborhoods or help introduce them to places they had never considered cycle of segregation demonstrates why a nuanced understanding of everyday social processes is critical for interrupting entrenched patterns of residential segregation
