tends therefore to make the government more responsible for it makes provision for doing in the open and thus subject to public control what under a decentralized system is done in secret and not subject to public control it tends also to secure efficient administration in that it makes it possible to relieve a host of officers from political control not only must our system of government be subjected to a reasonable degree of centralization from the administrative point of view but the party must receive pretty full legal recognition such recognition does not involve the destruction of strong national parties nor that of party leaders indeed such destruction or the substitution of weak local parties for the national parties would seem highly inexpedient if we are to judge by french and italian conditions but the present boss ought to be made responsible to the party and the party responsive to the popular will the people if the government is to be popular should have the power to veto propositions made by party leaders notice this book is published by historical books limited publicdomain org uk as a public domain book if you have any inquiries requests or need any help you can just send an email to publications publicdomain org uk this book is found as a public domain and free book based on various online catalogs if you think there are any problems regard copyright issues please contact us immediately via dmca publicdomain org uk excerpt from a plea for the introduction of responsible government and the representation of capital into the united states as safeguards against communism and disunion here hamilton ascribes the fact that the crown had long since ceased to veto bills not to the fact that the constitution compelled the crown to modify its cabinet and its policy to agree with the bill but to the art with which the crown succeeded in controlling elections and parliament whether this were true when hamilton wrote it or not it certainly would not be true to day to day if a bill which the government opposes passes the house of commons the cabinet must either resign or dissolve the parliament and call an election in which election the people will decide whether to sustain the old cabinet or the bill if they elect a new house favorable to the old cabinet then the bill is dropped if they elect a new house favorable to the bill then the old cabinet goes out and a new one favorable to the bill goes in and hence no bill ever passes both houses so as to reach the queen for the royal assent until her cabinet approve it and are ready to advise her to sign it as blackstone's commentaries written a few years earlier than the federalist nowhere utter this doctrine that the crown must modify its cabinet to agree with the house of commons though in practice it had for some time been the usage it is probable that it had not then become a doctrine of the english constitution but was regarded as most of the features of the english constitution in their origin were as a privilege accorded by the favor and grace of the crown certainly there is nothing in the writings of the framers of our constitution to indicate that they regarded it as a doctrine of english constitutional law at that time about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works

Value-Based Management in Government

excerpt from a plea for the introduction of responsible government and the representation of capital into the united states as safeguards against communism and disunion here hamilton ascribes the fact that the crown had long since ceased to veto bills not to the fact that the constitution compelled the crown to modify its cabinet and its policy to agree with the bill but to the art with which the crown succeeded in controlling elections and parliament whether this were true when hamilton wrote it or not it certainly would not be true to day to day if a bill which the government opposes passes the heuse of commons the cabinet must either resign or dissolve the parliament and call an election in which election the people will decide whether to sustain the old cabinet or the bill if they elect a new house favorable to the old cabinet then the bill is dropped if they elect a new house favorable to the bill then the old cabi net goes out and a new one favorable to the bill goes in and hence no bill ever passes both houses so as to reach the queen for the royal assent until her cabinet approve it and are ready to advise her to sign it as blackstone s commentaries written a few years earlier than the fed eralist nowhere utter this doctrine that the crown must modify its cabinet to agree with the house of commons though in practice it had for some time been the usage it is probable that it had not then become a doctrine of the english constitution but was regarded as most of the features of the english constitution in their origin were as a privilege accorded by the favor and grace of the crown certainly there is nothing in the writings of the framers of our constitution to indicate that they regarded it as a doctrine of english constitutional law at that time about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be
