Business Systems and Organizational Capabilities 2011-12-12

twenty first century capitalism has been marked by an increasing international economic independence and considerable differences between dominant economic systems of coordination and control in this context national competition and coordination within industries has increased but the governance of leading firms and the kinds of competences they develop remain quite diverse this book shows how different kinds of firms become established and develop different capabilities in different societies and as a result are effective in particular kinds of industries and markets by integrating institutionalist approaches to organizations with the capabilities theory of the firm richard whitley suggests how we can understand this combination of diversity and integration by developing the comparative business systems framework in three major ways first by identifying the particular circumstances in which distinctive business systems and innovation systems become nationally established and reproduced as well as how changing endogenous and exogenous pressures have affected the major kinds of business systems that developed in many oecd states during the postwar period second by showing how variations in authority sharing with employees and business partners and in the provision of organizational careers lead institutional regimes to affect the nature of organizational capabilities that dominant firms develop and enable them to deal with different kinds of risks and opportunities in particular technologies and markets third by identifying the circumstances in which multinational firms are likely to develop distinctive transnational organizational capabilities through such authority sharing and careers and so become different kinds of companies from their more domestically focused competitors in many if not most cases of cross national managerial coordination these conditions rarely exist and so the extent to which multinational firms do indeed constitute distinct organizational forms and strategic actors is much less than is sometimes claimed the cold war revealed for the first time in human history the logic of human togetherness which indicated that it was not only necessary for nation states to live together but also possible for them to do so the necessity was because of the inescapably shared vulnerability of mutually assured destruction not only in terms of security but more so in economic well being and political stability the possibility was due to the unipolar world structure sustained by the global governance web of interdependent partnership which worked powerfully between the power agents to ensure the best of all possible world this latent governance system was both hierarchical and dynamic because its power was connective in the sense that power was rooted in one another and the ability to be interdependent by empowering other power agents and sharing vulnerability at the same time was the way of becoming the nucleus on the global web of interdependent partners and hence gaining power in transforming one another connectively and governing the world collectively george kennan s patience in building up hard and soft powers within individual power agents of the web and wilson roosevelt s institutionalization of collective power above each power agents contributed to the construction of the system the soviet big brotherly governing type was proven a failure
