cross border bank lending led to a surge in emerging market firms bond issuance in international markets what we term the bon d anza using firm level data for five large latin american economies we provide evidence of a significant change in companies external funding strategies and liability structures after 2010 as well as in the balance sheet risks that firms face we find that stepped up bond issuance was mostly aimed at re financing rather than funding investment projects as firms extended the average duration of their debt while securing lower fixed rates reducing roll over and interest rate risks the shift towards safer maturity structures has come at the expense of a leveraging up in foreign currency denominated financial debt in several countries reversing a de dollarization trend seen during the last decade we also provide evidence that a substantial part of these bonds were issued through offshore vehicles suggesting regulatory and tax arbitrage strategies for some
