difficult to understand how there can be found men of learning and taste who are willing to sacrifice sense to mere words and phrases when i can employ a phrase understood by everyone why should i instead make use of a phrase which may not be understood by one half of my audience instead of addressing my flock in plain homely words which they will all understand why should i select words which will have no meaning for them and will be intelligible only to scholars 1 a misdirected admiration for classic writers an extravagant love of elegance and purity of language sometimes blinds even the most sensible men and they wish to employ in the church where most of the audience are ignorant or but poorly educated language which would be suited to the halls of a university 3 of the affability which should accompany preaching when in ordinary conversation we wish to convince a person of any truth or to induce him to perform some good action we are accustomed to do so in the most gracious manner possible in order to conciliate him and win over his sympathies now the self same method must be adopted when addressing the public and especially by a parish priest who must speak to them as a father and consequently with the affection which a father entertains towards his children 1 preachers who affect the style which the author here so justly condemns do so in the hope of gaining a reputation for eloquence and yet they only prove thereby that they are utterly ignorant of what constitutes true eloquence no man says blair can be called eloquent who speaks to an assembly on subjects or in a strain which none or few of them comprehend the unmeaning applause which the ignorant give to what is a field tested pragmatic and resourceful guide to the daunting and logistically
